Township Fire Chief Larry

member of the task force, and County Commissioner

named public information

Flowers said his main job visitors would use the Tuttle Crossing interchange, which could handle the increase in traffic better than the roads to the east of the site.

A strip center would mean more traffic would come from local residents near the mall and therefore the local roads would see a heavier traffic flow.

The study indicates 12
road improvements would be needed; Edwards has agreed to make 10 of the improvements and Columbus would complete two, including the widening of Frantz Road between Tuttle
and Hayden Run.

CRIME

The mall would feature a 24-hour security system, with two to four guards patrolling it during regular business hours, four to six guards during weekends and special events and one or two guards from 2 a.m. to the mall's morning opening.

The guards will patrol the inside and outside of the mall and security cameras will be used to watch all parking lots.

this as a money saving device, it will not work."

HENSLER POINTS to
the department heads at both high schools as an example that those involved in making decisions that affect a building need to have the time to make those choices.

"Currently, teachers making building decisions are already overwhelmed,"
Hensler said.
and teachers' union will have to reopen the union's contract with the school board, Hensler said.

But it's just the part that affects working conditions, he said.

Hensler said he does he see that as a problem since both the WEA and the state teachers' union, Ohio Education Association, have shown site-based decision making can improve education, Hensler said.

BUT SITE-BASED management can be destructive to staff morale if only one person is involved in the decision making process,
Hensler said.

"The important thing is it has to be real," he said. "It can't be a facade. You can't say you have site-based decision making process and all the decision making is done by one person."

He knows in some districts that use the site-based decision making process, they've created a committee to make policy decisions.

"You have to empower the whole staff. Everyone who delivers services to the kids in that building has to be involved," he said.
